Editorial Note

The contents of this journal reflect a broad interpretation of Social Well-being Studies. The intention is to provide a forum for material which is accessible to a wider audience than that of academic journals in these fields, and is often more topical than the publication schedules of such journals can accommodate, but which is nevertheless thoughtful and original.

We encourage submissions from individuals not associated with the Center, particularly from academic researchers working on applied problems whose results have topical policy application. This journal has always promoted the dissemination of quality research in a form understandable to a wide audience, and we intend to strengthen this tradition. To maintain the topicality of the journal, submissions will be refereed quickly.
